Gang related issues and County Lines

This course aims to give learners a deeper understanding of gang related issues and county lines and define what these key terms mean.

This course is suitable for a range of roles working with vulnerable children, including social workers, care workers, pastoral care, teachers, teaching assistants and healthcare professionals.

Which one stands out to you???

Why do young people join the gangs? Decker and Van Winkle (1996) join the youth bands as composed of shots and pushes. They pull the attractiveness of the gang. The belonging to the band can improve the prestige or status among friends (Baccaglioni, 1993), in particular the girls (for boys) (Decker and Van Winkle, 1996) and offer the opportunity to be with them (Slayton, Stephens and Mackenna, 1993). The bands offer other interesting opportunities such as the possibility of excitement (brush et al., 1994) by selling drugs and making money (Decker and Van Winkle, 1996). Therefore, many young people see each other as a rational choice in deciding to join a gang; they see personal advantages for belonging to the band (Sanchez-Jankowski, 1991). The social, economic and cultural forces push many teenagers in the direction of the gangs. Protection from other bands and perceived general well-being are key factors (Baccaglioni, 1993; Decker and Van Winkle, 1996). As noted above, some researchers claim that the status of "Sottoclasse" (Wilson, 1987) of the minority young people serves to push them into bands (Hagedorn, 1988; Moore, 1978; Taylor, 1989; Vigil, 1988). Hear marginal, teenagers join the bands for social relations that give them a sense of identity (Vigil and Long, 1990). For some young people, the bands provide a way to solve social adaptation problems, in particular the tests and tribulations of adolescence (short and Strodbeck, 1965). In some community, young people are recruited or forced intensely in gangs (Johnstone, 1983). Apparently they have no choice. Some are virtually born in gangs due to the traditions of the neighborhood and the participation or involvement of the previous band (and perhaps continue) of their parents in the criminal activity (Moore, 1978). Risk factors for belonging to the band 1 risk factors for belonging to the youth band that have been identified in studies using many types of research methods, including transversal, longitudinal and and(observations) Studies. The examination of this table suggests that the current state of knowledge of the risk factors for belonging to the band is not perfected. Since so many risk factors have been identified, it is difficult to determine the priorities for the prevention and intervention programs of the bands without an in-depth assessment of the crime problem that identifies the most prevalent risk factors. Long-term studies on great urban teenagers in Rochester, NY (Thornberry, 1998) and Seattle (Hill et al., in the press) have identified causal risk factors for adhesion to the band. Both studies, the first financed by Ojdp and the second supported by Ojdp and other agencies and organizations, measure the risk factors in the community, in the family, in the school, in the group of friends and in the domains of individual attributes. Since both studies are collecting data on their respective samples for a long period of time, the risk factors measured in early adolescence can be used to predict belonging to the band in points more forward in adolescence. The identification of the first risk factors indicates priority for prevention and intervention programs. In the Rochester studio, Thornberry (1998) found predictors of belonging to the band among the males in all five domains listed above. The most important risk factor of the community is growing in the neighborhoods where the level of social integration (attachment) is low. Nor high levels of disorganization of the neighborhood neither high levels of violence include belonging to the band. Among the family variables, the poverty, the absence of biological parents, the low attachment of the parents to the child and the low supervision of the parents all increase the probability of belonging to the band. Three school variables are risk factors a isracioosA adnab alla aznenetrappa'lus etrof otlom ottapmi nu onnah enateoc i ,icitsalocs irottaf ia emeisnI ,itanngensi ilga onemaccata ossab nu e aloucas al rep itneduts ilged onepmi ossab nu ,)itneduts e irotnged ad aist aloucas a ossecus li rep evitatpeps essab ,ivitacifngis friends and unsupervised "hanging around" with these delinquent friends are a potent combination. Important individual risk factors identified in the Rochester study are low self-esteem, numerous negative life events, depressive symptoms, and easy access to drugs or favorable views toward drug use. Finally, youth who use drugs and are involved in delinquency – particularly violent delinquency – are more likely to become gang members than are youth who are less involved in delinquency and drug use. In sum, "youth who grow up in more disorganized neighborhoods; who come from impoverished, distressed families; who do poorly in school and have low attachment to school and teachers; who associate with delinquent peers; and engage in various forms of problem behaviors are at increased risk for becoming gang members" (Thornberry, 1998:157). Seattle researchers discovered somewhat similar risk factors compared with Thornberry's analysis for both male and female gang membership (Hill et al., in press; Kosterman et al., 1996). The most important community factor identified in the Seattle study is growing up in neighborhoods where drugs are readily available. Several family variables are important: family instability, extreme economic deprivation, family management problems, parents with violent attitudes, and sibling antisocial behavior. Numerous school factors have been identified, including low educational aspiration, low commitment to school, low school attachment, high levels of antisocial behavior in school, low achievement test scores, the identity of being learning disabled, and low grades. The most important peer group factor is associating with law-violating peers. Individual risk factors are the early use of alcohol and marijuana, prior delinquency, hyperactivity, externalizing behaviors (hostility, aggression, and rule breaking), poor skills in refusing offers to engage in antisocial behavior, and early sexual being a male, feeling safe in the neighborhood, and residing in a poor family to put young people at high risk for the involvement of the gangs, regardless of other risk factors of community, family, school or peer (Kosterman et al., 1996)However, the greater the number of risk factors to which young people are exposed, the greater the risk of combining a band in adolescence. Children who live 7 or more risk factors per age between 10 and 12 years old are 13 times more likely to join a band in adolescence compared to children who experience only 1 risk factor or none to the first ones et. . In Press.) Youth Gangs: an overview of the minor justice bulletin Á August 1998 I studied gangs in Jamaica, Belize, El Salvador, Guatemala, Trinidad, St Kitts, Antigua, St Lucia, England and Wales, and in the United States of America. Using the observation of the participants, the in-depth interviews and peer (search for partial ethnographic evaluation): I traced the life of thousands of members of the band á € "The probabilities are I have an idea of because the boys come together. People often suggest that children are recruited in bands comparable to a draft system. I didn't find that this was accurate. In fact, while some boys are actually forced into bands, most are attracted, also driven by the family and society. Some guys also ask to enter bands "and few are also denied the entrance. I have seen many guys deny belonging to the band on the basis of being 'too good' for the band. The most memorable accident occurred in the Spanish city. I went to a don and saw the men of him beat a boy of about 15 years old. I had to know why, but also the protocol. I looked at the Don and waited for an explanation. He shook his head, sighed, then he explained: A This guy is there brighter in this community. I kept it at school from his dead father, because I want you to become a lawyer, you know, you leave us here every now and then. Gnihton Evah MIH em gnillet mih There are seven main reasons why boys join bands; and these are often superimposed rather than distinct. Teens in bands have no mother or father or bad relations with both: 1 Broken family: between 2004 and 2014, as part of a large study on multiple murderers, I managed to convince 17 Dons or gang leader with power from over 28 communities in the city centre in Jamaica to allow me to profile young people under their influence. The 28 communities were divided into 86 districts or corners. In each district, from three to five young people sat down with me and protruded every young male between 15 and 34 years. At that time, I have profiled seven critical characteristics on 2,316 young people, including material on their families and the status of the band. What did I learn about the boys who joined a band? a. More than 40 % came from houses where there was a constant conflict, especially among the families. More than 60 % had no father in his family or had serious problems with his father/paternal figure. c. More than 75 % had a missing mother; a bad relationship with her mother or one who was involved in prostitution or lifestyle that breaks the sense of attachment of the boy (the boys are fractured by mothers who have multiple partners). d. Over 95 % had a missing mother or father or both, or suffered from a home conflict. In summary, in this set of data (as well as in the data sets of Belize and Trinidad), a very few boys were found who have an educational home to join a band. It is easy to find guys of very nutritive houses in the city center crews, who go out to the corner to demonstrate masculinity-but not join the bands. There is nothing to live for "2 Revenge: a third of all band members can expect it to give a story on"Nothing to live more "because someone or a group killed his mother, father, sister or brother. The second most strong revenge is the rape of his mother or sister. The third is arson, if a group or someone burned his house, especially with his family in it - and no matter if all lives were spared. In the adolescent study of St. Catherine (2004), we discovered that the boys enter the bands not only to get revenge on these reasons, but also to prevent the event. In this study, only the boys expressed these things among their greatest fears. MEN CON DEGRES VOI GANG POSITIVE 3 Economy: Almost all small bands are aligned with the larger ones that are connected to massive confederations that help each other. Joining a small band can provide contacts to allow a young man to join or receive illegal jobs or money from larger gangs who have resources from the international drug economy. The life of the gang pays. In a country of economic uncertainty – and above all high levels of prejudice against the males of the inner city - bands become an attractive alternative. In recent studies, young people with the first grades listed scam and executive positions of the band as occupation. This is a serious concern. TYPE How to be killed in the inner city 4 Ultra protection: Some inner cities are so violent and isolated that young people must be associated with a more protective group of an angle crew. For the Kingston Metropolitan Region (KMR), the 2005 murder rate was 340/100,000 – and moved to 405 when adding police murders. Most garrisons have murder rates of more than 450 per 100,000 for men of the combative age (14-34 years). This means that it is more likely that he is killed in his community than in Iraq during the large-scale war. The politics of garrisons is mainly attacks rather than community policy.Young people must protect themselves from political gangs or rival gangs, as well as the police. Joining a gang in communities of extreme violence is more rational than we often perceive. BAGNI are more POPULAR POPULARS Low conviction rate: in the most isolated garrisons of the internal city, the condemnation rate can be bass of 1 of 10. Cié means that there is little discouragement from the activity and murder of bands. The body bags are more popular with the belief in the internal city - and many young people who have "nothing to live for more" are not afraid of body bags. The identification of the grassy carpet is equivalent to the crisis of the identity of death 6: regardless of the fact that a young man is a member of the gang, is identified by the community or the grass in which he resides and can be killed for this reason. There is therefore a logic to be active - rather than being a victim to be simply associated with an area. Only young people with strong support systems (parents, church and school) remain outside the gangs and crews when their territory is active and suffer from constant attacks.
